Though basic, the features of Photoshop Elements make it a powerful tool for editing images. It can also do everything that Photoshop can do, such as adding layers and saving to the cloud. And it can do a lot of things Photoshop can't do such as basic image editing. A retired NASA computer scientist, Neil Armstrong, famously said that we can "fly around the world many times, but we can't stand still." That quote is a great metaphor for how computers work. If you take a close look at many computer programs, you will see that even though the programs you use are written by people, they do not "think" in the same way that people do. Like people, computers must make choices. They must decide what to do or not do in a situation, which is what we call "programming." But they don't make those choices the same way that we make them. And that is what makes computers truly different from people. But because they don't "think" in the same way, computers are what we call "brains-in-a-vat." They can't make mistakes and usually don't. Even though they are computers, they can look and act like people because their brain is just a computer too, albeit a very complex one. This is why a computer can open a file or save a document just as you would. And just as people do, computers use programs to make decisions about how to work. Every computer program (or program, for short) makes a choice about what to do. Typically, that choice is based on the conditions the computer has "sensed" or "recognized." For example, if I open a file in Photoshop Elements, a program will make a choice about whether it should open the file or not. Likewise, when I save a file, Photoshop Elements will decide whether it should save it or not. If it were going to be sent somewhere, the program might decide whether to send it now or later. Computer programs don't have feelings like people do. They can't cry, get mad, or happy. They don't know if it's a hot or cold day, feel sorry for themselves or worry about the future. They can't feel empathy for anything. Computer programs are good at what they 05a79cecff

The Eraser tool is used to remove unwanted parts of an image. For example, you can erase parts of an image you want to keep and paste them somewhere else, remove backgrounds and so on. The Blur filter is used to blur objects in an image. This allows you to change the look of a subject in an image. The Gradient tool allows you to make an image more interesting by filling it with a pattern, color, or even a gradient. The Pen tool allows you to draw on an image. It's great for retouching an object, and for creating interesting shapes, patterns, and designs. The Liquify filter allows you to change the way an object in an image moves. For example, you can elongate objects or squash them into smaller shapes. The Refine Edge tool allows you to smoothen or sharpen edges in an image. The Sharpen tool sharpens areas of an image where the lighting is unclear. The Erase tool allows you to quickly remove areas of an image. There are many more, of course.
